The members of the band The Country were even before the start in 2008 well established musicians in Stockholm. Their combined merits range from Bobo Stenson, Palle Danielsson, Swedish rap star Adam Tensta, producer Björn Yttling and movie director Wim Wenders. And their own music inspiration could come from Nirvana as well as Miles Davis.

Together they strive to find new places and ways to express themselves. Along the path something new and extraordinary emerges were five strong individual voices complement and feed of each other with a clear collective goal - to make music, without any compromises.

After touring Sweden and Germany and being nominated for the Swedish independent awards "Manifest" for their first album, The Country is back with new material and a new album that won't let their listeners down. The recording was done during a few intense days in Studio Epidemin, Gothenburg. Just like the previous recording, old and new jazz is blended with alternative pop and rock without losing the element of exploring improvisations. The result should not disappoint anyone who has a passion for good music.
